

111-10-08 Jita Market TradeHub crash increases suicide rate

Written by Karagh

Thursday, 08 October 2009 15:15 - Last Updated Tuesday, 19 January 2010 15:25

Jita - X'Fario is the latest victim of a row of suicide events happening after the market crash which occurred the last week in the largest tradehub in the known universe. According to the video security system X'Fario manipulated the airlock system of her ship hangar and opened the outside doors with his last words "Its all gone ... ". She was one of the hundreds of stock brokers of jita who saw the market collapse. After several heavy transactions on the market who raised the market value between 25 and 100% the market is falling like never anyone saw before. With a total value of several hundred billion ISK lots of the T2 manufacturing components, reactions and moon minerals were bought within one day. Since then the market movement is on a free fall. Total value of nearly all traded goods were cut approximately by 50% so all traders lost billions the last week.

Nic Oso - strategic analyst of The Wild Bunch - statement about the current situation where: "Crazy ... stop asking me shit - Shield Emitters are at 46k right now - we built them for 62k ... so go away and talk to someone else ..."

Investors aren't happy about the situation - and of course some of the producers don't seem to notice that they are selling T2 components at a loss value. However buyers can be happy. Prices were never that low than right now.